The Latest Finds

Once again Lady Gaga anticipated the trends (a good two years ago at that) as a guest on the American television show The View wearing a head-to-toe hounds tooth look in black and white. She showed the more fun side of the traditional "pied de poule" print, which is called "pied de coq" when the checks are larger. While it was traditionally meant for more classic pieces, hounds tooth is being dusted off this season in a more playful and fun manner. And it's not just for irreverent suits, hats and coats, but it is especially suited for accessories as well. From ankle boots with spike heels to retro bags to boyish caps, hounds tooth really makes its mark. It's come a long way from Scotland where it was created in black and white and is also a far cry from the elegant 1950s Christian Dior styles. It's become a part of the contemporary aesthetic with a new spring in its step that is ironic and spirited.
